Mary Jo Ray turned 113 in May, 2008. She was the twelfth oldest person in the world. Ray was one of the few people who lived to more than 110 years old. We often call them centenarians, "She often drinks milk. She hardly(几乎不) gets angry with others and is always happy. So she is in good health and hardly gets ill. I think the reason (原因) for her long life was drinking milk every day and trying to be happy," said her granddaughter, Katherine.
Her doctor, Dr Perls, said another reason for Ray's long life is her genes (基因). She got them from her parents. He said, "These genes can keep you in good health and let you live longer. People can usually live to about 80 years old. Those with the right genes can live more than 100 years old. They also pass those genes to their children. So if a person's parents live longer, he or she will probably live longer, too." Dr Perls also said, "You may not have those genes. Don't smoke, don't drink too much. do exercise and also do things to relax. You can also live longer if you do those things in your life."
