Many British people like to go bird-watching in their free time. That's why there are many English sayings about birds.
Read the following to learn about them.
He eats like a hird
This doesn't mean he eats worms and seeds! A mother might be worried if her son or daughter eats like a bird. It means that the boy or girl eats very little and is very fussy(挑剔) about food.
Birds of a feather flock(群聚) together.
You never see peacock with a crow (孔雀和乌鸦在一起), or a goose with an eagle. These birds are very different.
They like to be with other birds of the same kind. People are like this, too. We always make friends with people who have things in common with us.
His chickens have come home to roost(栖息).
This means that he has problems now because of bad things he did before. If you play computer games and sleep an afternoon when you should be studying for your exams, you will fail your exams. Then your friends can say that your chickens have come home to roost.

I began to meet English for the first time in Grade Six. I had great interest in this foreign language at once. As an old saying goes:" Interest is the best teacher." When I was a student, I learned vocabulary by heart, learned grammar, made sentences, wrote passages and read books as much as I could.

Some of my friends find it easy to forget vocabulary that they learned the other day. So do I! You never remember it without using it often. So, you'd better look them up in a dictionary when you meet new words and see other meanings and usage. Then make your own sentences from time to time. Another way to take new words in mind is reading articles and you can easily remember new words through the context. When reading in English, you're not only reading English words, but also getting messages from it. I'm lucky to know so many foreign friends and teachers around the world. So I have more chances to improve my English. If you want to communicate freely with foreigners, don't be shy to practice with anyone who knows English. What is the best title of this article? B. The development of English as a world language is one of the most interesting events of the late 20 th and early 21 st centuries. It is the language 1by speakers of many different languages to communicate with each other.

There are about 5.8 billion people who do not speak English as either their first or second language. 2, we have entered a period in world history when children are all learning beginner or higher level English. Already, there are almost 180 million learners of English being educated in China, a number which is rising. Also, many 3 are learning English at work or in their free time.
But looking into the future, the number of learners may grow smaller almost as quickly as it increased. If the project to teach English to the world's primary schoolchildren is 4, the children of the future will now need English lessons at all.
For many centuries, Latin was the common language 5 educated people in Europe. But just as the use of Latin slowly disappeared, English may also not remain the world language forever. Many language learners are already expressing an interest in learning Chinese, Spanish and Arabic.
