作文：

Dear editor,

Recently there has been a series of wide-ranging discussions about whether it is necessary for primary school students to learn English.

As a senior high school student who has gone through all the pains and efforts to learn this language, I firmly believe it's time we took immediate action to free primary school students from the sufferings.

While English is a must in international trade, for most of its child learners across the country, whose number is counted in millions, English is not necessary in their future life. Nor is it an essential part in their future jobs. Most students learn English only to pass exams and that's why they will soon forget every word after graduation. Why must we trap young kids into an odyssey of learning something unimportant and unnecessary?

A curriculum without English will certainly benefit parents financially, and of course, will be a blessing for young kids who desire less academic pressure and more time to play.
