Places to go for Halloween fun in Chengdu

One of the most fun and fulfilling things during the season is to throw a Halloween party and boogie through the night with friends and family. When pumpkins, witch's hats and spiders make their annual appearance you can tell Halloween is approaching.

Whether it's a party for children or just one for adults, there are so many great treats, games, music and activities that you can enjoy yourselves in the city.

Dark Mirror-themed Party

With a scary theme — Dark Mirror (黑暗之镜), Lan Kwai Fong Chengdu this year will host a big Halloween party on October 31st with these elements: Ghost Parade, Haunted House, Costume Contest and so on. Participants could enjoy live music show, dance and play “trick or treat” games in the public outdoor area.

Venue: Lan Kwai Fong Chengdu, 1 Shuijing Street

Halloween Carnival Party

The Chengdu Happy Valley Amusement Park is to host a Halloween Carnival Party that features magic performances, live rock bands performance and lots of wicked events for participants. The Halloween season in the park will last till November 11 with admission from 80 to 150 yuan.

Venue: 16 Xihua Avenue

Beer Nest Halloween Party

The Beer Nest I and Beer Nest II will be decorated in a haunted(闹鬼的) house style and there will be scary movies playing on the big screens of the Beer Nest II. Entertaining activities, such as food & drink specials, live DJs, cool music and Spooky Kids Workshops, will be held and a professional markup artist from Sweden will be there for those who want to make an impression Halloween night.

Halloween E-sports Night Party

The Halloween E-sports Night to take place on October 31 is one of the highlights of the E-sports Cartoon and Animation Festival to be held in Chengdu Eastern Suburb Memory on October 31-November 1. It will offer relevant activities including cosplay showcases, e-sports competition and live music shows as a platform to communicate with celebrated anime artists and cartoon lovers.

For most kids, a typical school day includes lessons in math, science, and English language arts. But for Callista Grant, 11, a typical day might also include instruction in American Indian drumming and dancing. She studies the Ojibwe (oh-jib-way) and Lakota languages, too, and enjoys school powwows.

Callista goes to the American Indian Magnet School (AIMS), in Saint Paul, Minnesota. It is open to kids in pre-K to grade 8.

Although other U.S. schools teach American Indian culture, the teachers at AIMS say their school is unique. They connect lessons to American Indian culture. When students learn about plant life cycles in science, they also learn about how Native people used herbs for ceremonies and healing. A language arts class may include a reading about the meaning of jingle dresses. Callista says the focus on American Indian culture helps everyone know that "the culture is still alive."

Callista is Cherokee and Ojibwe. Of the 680 students at AIMS, only one-quarter are American Indian. It is a public school that is open to all kids in the community. All students gain from the school's focus. "It's important for everyone to know about the people who were here first and that they still live here today," says teacher Tamara Goggleye. Lessons give all students a chance to explore their heritage.

Callista represents the school at powwows and other events. She is proud to teach others about her history. "An Ojibwe prophecy says that we might lose our culture if we don't show it to our kids," Callista says. "Kids need to help pass down our culture, or it could go away." AIMS and Callista are working to make sure that won't happen.

The president of the school AIMS, Mr. Philips says they will go down this road with sincerity and determination, which is thought valuable by experts.

56. In what way are Callista Grant's school days different from other kids'?

- A. She studies math and science.
- B. She draws English paintings.
- C. She practices dancing and drumming.
- D. She learns American Indian languages.

57. What can we infer from the third paragraph?

- A. Teachers at AIMS are proud of their school.
- B. AIMS don't teach American Indian culture.

- C. Students are mostly interested in language arts.
 - D. American Indian culture is being neglected by others.

58. What do we know about the school AIMS?

- A. It provides free schooling for kids nearby.
- B. It focuses on American history development.
- C. It helps students to explore their heritage.
- D. It proves the existence of American Indians.

59. What does the underlined word “that” in the last paragraph but one refer to?

- A. Ojibwe culture’s going away.
- B. Forgetting her own history.
- C. Showing her culture to kids.
- D. Passing down her culture.

60. What can we learn from this text?

- A. Callista Grant is different from other students.
- B. American Indian culture is a popular culture.
- C. The school AIMS is doing a worthwhile thing.
- D. It takes time for students to love the special culture.

Last year, I called emergency services because I found my partner unconscious on the floor. Within minutes, a police car and ambulance arrived, filled with police, doctors and nurses who moved my partner away to the emergency department, where he received the critical care that he needed.

A week later, still marveling at the impact of a handful of strangers, I wrote thank-you notes to those helpful police and doctors and nurses and baked for them. It was a small gesture with a big impact. When I dropped off cakes at the police and fire stations, they thanked me for the gifts. I drove away feeling light and happy, partly because I’d done a good deed, but mostly because I was amazed that there are selfless people who do life-saving work and expect nothing in return. Research has shown that sharing thoughts of gratitude and performing acts of kindness can boost your mood and have other positive effects on your health.

When you feel thankful for things you’ve received or something that’s happened, that’s gratitude. It's impossible to feel it in a vacuum; others are always responsible, whether they're loved ones, strangers or a higher power. "Gratitude is how you relate to others, when you see yourself in connection with things larger than yourself," Ruch says.

Today, many people don't stop to appreciate what they have, much less express gratitude. Our instant-gratification lifestyle may be to blame.

"With commercial and social media, everything is speeding the younger generation to make them feel that they are the centre of the universe," says Tamiko Zablith, founder of the London-based etiquette consulting firm Minding Manners. "If it's all about them, why thank others?"

Why not thank others? Studies have shown that people who express gratitude increase their happiness levels, lower their blood pressure levels, get better quality sleep, improve their relationships, have a positive impact on their depression levels and are less affected by pain.

Because gratitude is a fairly new field of study, researchers are still trying to identify its cause-and-effect relationship with various health benefits.

A New study by the British government has discovered the mental well-being of the country's teenage girls has worsened.

The survey, which included 30,000 14-year-old students in 2005 and 2014, showed 37 percent of girls with psychological stress, up from 34 percent in 2005. British boys' stress level was actually seen to fall over the same time period, from 17 percent to 15 percent. The report's authors pointed out the "advent of the social media age" could be a major contributing factor for increasing stress among teenage British girls.

"The adolescent years are a time of rapid physical, cognitive and emotional development," Pam Ramsden, a lecturer in psychology at the University of Bradford in the United Kingdom, wrote in a recent blog post. "Teenagers interact with people in order to learn how to become competent adults. In the past, they would engage with parents, teachers and other adults in their community as well as extended family members and friends. Now we can also add social media to that list of social and emotional development."

Throughout adolescence, girls and boys develop characteristics like confidence and self-control. Since teenage brains have not completely developed, teens don't have the cognitive awareness and impulse control to keep from posting inappropriate content. Furthermore, this content can easily be circulated far and wide with disastrous implications.

Social media can also feed into girls' insecurities about their appearance, Ramsden said. These sites are often filled with images of people with body type unattainable to the normal person. However, these images and the messages tied to them creep into social standards.

"Social media allows girls to make comparisons among friends as well as celebrities and then provides them with ‘solutions’ such as extreme dieting tips and workouts to reach their goals,” Ramsden said. “Concerns about body image can negatively impact their quality of life preventing them from having healthy relationships and taking up time that could be better spent developing other aspects of their personalities.”

66. How does the survey tell us the negative impact of social media?

- A. By making experiments. B. By raising a question.
C. By making comparisons D. By analyzing causes and effects.

67. According to Pam Ramsden, we can know_____.

- A. teenagers hate sharing their thoughts with people around
B. teenagers’ mental health has nothing with social media
C. teenagers will not post improper content on the Internet
D. the ways of teenagers’ interaction with people have changed

68. What is Ramsden’s attitude toward the images with fine body shape?

- A. Supportive. B. Indifferent. C. Critical. D. Concerned.

69. According to the last paragraph, it is necessary for teenagers_____.

- A. to get rid of the bad effects of social media.
B. to follow the celebrities’ example
C. to be concerned about their body image
D. to make comparisons among friends

70. What does this text mainly tell us?

- A. The well-being of teenagers in Britain.
B. The social media’s negative effect on teenagers.
C. The development of teenagers in Britain.
D. How to interact with teenagers in Britain.

John D. Rockefeller was born in 1839 on a farm near Richford, New York, a small town in the western part of the state. He worked hard both in school and outside school and he also showed the skill and ability to produce new things, especially works of art.

Rockefeller began to look for work when he finished high school at the age of sixteen. Since the age of five, he had worked at odd jobs, such as raising turkeys or working in potato fields. Now he looked for better opportunities.

At first, Rockefeller worked in an office, where he was successful and where he learned a great deal about business. But he wanted to go into business for himself. So he and a friend formed a partnership to buy and sell grain, hay, and other farm products.

The business was successful, but Rockefeller decided to go into the new oil industry. He formed his own company so that he could make free use of his skill and imagination in business.

The company Rockefeller started became the Standard Oil Company. It took the oil from wells and refined it, that is, changed it into products such as kerosene (煤油) and grease (油脂).

Rockefeller's business grew until it was worth millions of dollars. Almost everyone who bought oil products had to buy them from the Standard Oil Company. Finally, the government and the courts ordered the Standard Oil Company to be divided up to give other oil companies a chance.

John D. Rockefeller earned a great fortune and he gave away much money. By the time of his death, Rockefeller had created a special fund of money to be used to improve health and education and another fund to improve “the well-being of mankind throughout the world.” During his lifetime, Rockefeller had gained almost one billion dollars; he gave away about half of it. But Rockefeller's personal life was fairly frugal.

How time flies! You have been studying in Beijing University for nearly a month, during which you must have achieved a lot. Well, how is everything going?

I am glad to tell you that I will attend the English speech contest to be held in Beijing next month, which is absolutely a great opportunity for me to improve myself. And now I am trying my best to make preparations for it. However, I have some difficulty in collecting relevant information and putting what I have learned into practice, which bothers me a lot. In addition, the most difficult thing is that I have no idea how I can attract the audience's attention. I would appreciate it if you could do me a favor.

Looking forward to your reply. By the way, after the contest, I am to drop in at your university to visit you.

Yours truly,

M: We're planning on having it around noon.

Text 3

M: What a beautiful skirt!

W: Do you think it looks good on me?

M: Yes, and it goes beautifully with your shoes.

Text 4

W: Can I help you?

M: Mm, I just need something about business news. Can you recommend some?

W: The Times is a must.

M: Thank you. I'll have one.

Text 5

W: I feel pity for the old man.

M: I feel the same way.

W: It must be terrible to grow old.

M: It sure is. He has no one to turn to, very terrible indeed.

Text 6

M: Come in, please. Oh, Mary, come over and sit here. Your annual report is well done. I heard that you did it within just two days.

W: Yeah. But I've received a lot of help from my colleagues.

M: I know you're a capable person. The others couldn't have helped you much. They had their own work to do.

W: Thank you for saying that. But I don't always do a good job. I've been thinking that you must still be upset with me for the wrong figures I gave you the day before yesterday.

M: Take it easy. Everyone makes mistakes. However, be more careful next time. You have a bright future ahead of you.

W: Thank you so much for your encouragement, Mr. Chandler. I will do my best.

M: Where to, Miss?

W: Diamond Hotel on Beach Street. How much do you think the fare will be?

M: Well, about three dollars. I can't tell exactly, but whatever it is, it'll show on the meter.

W: I took a taxi yesterday from the train station to Diamond Hotel, and the driver charged me six dollars.

M: I wouldn't say that, miss. Any taxi driver would lose his license if he got caught doing a thing like that.

W: I didn't know that.

M: Now you know. Are you new in this city?

W: Yes. I'll probably stay here for two weeks.

M: In that case, you can try to call a taxi company to send you a taxi next time when you need one. That'll certainly make you feel safer.... Here you are, Diamond Hotel.

W: Thank you for the advice. How much is it?

M: Two dollars and ninety-eight cents.

W: Here is three dollars. Keep the change please.

M: Last year, I took up the hobby of birding or bird watching after my friend took me out to observe some birds out near the lake. Basically, birding involves observing birds in their natural habitat. Actually, you don't need to leave your backyard to observe many birds. The best seasons to watch birds are in the spring and fall as they migrate from north to south in many areas. I usually go out with my telescope and a guidebook in the mornings because most birds are very active in finding food at that time. You also have to know where to look to see them and how to recognize their bird calls. Because I'm new to birding, I use my bird guidebook to look up certain kinds of birds. You have to look carefully at their feathers, the way they behave and move, and their size to recognize many birds because some look very similar. Also, take note of the time of year you see birds because this information might tell you more about their breeding area and migration routes. Besides looking at birds, I like the activity because it gives me a chance to exercise as I travel to different places, and it allows me to relax my mind in the great outdoors.

第二节

76. Dear Mary,

How time flies! You have been studying in Beijing University for nearly a month, during which you must have achieved a lot. Well, how is everything going?

I am glad to tell you that I will attend the English speech contest to be held in Beijing next month, which is absolutely a great opportunity for me to improve myself. And now I am trying my best to make preparations for it. However, I have some difficulty in collecting relevant information and putting what I have learned into practice, which bothers me a lot. In addition, the most difficult thing is that I have no idea how I can attract the audience's attention. I would appreciate it if you could do me a favor.

Looking forward to your reply. By the way, after the contest, I am to drop in at your university to visit you.

Yours truly,

Li Jin
