In Britain, business leaders are becoming increasingly concerned that growing numbers of recruits (新成员) are incapable of dividing a real pie into eight equal slices.

There are so many examples of the shortage of basic literacy and numeration (读写和计算) skills among many school and university leavers.

A report from the Confederation of British Industry says the problem is so bad that one in three employers has to send staff for training to learn the English and maths they did not learn at school.

"Employers' views on numeration and literacy are clear—people must read and write fluently and must be able to carry out basic mental arithmetic (算术的)," Richard Lambert, director general of the CBI, said.

The CBI report, Working on the Three R's, which was sponsored by the Department for Education, found that poor literacy was a problem in all fields, while poor numeration was of particular concern in the manufacturing and construction field.

One company manager complained of a "total lack of knowledge of timetables" among staff, which meant many were unable to carry out simple calculations.

A personnel manager for a construction firm said that many applicants were unable to construct a sentence and that grammar, and their handwriting and spelling were often "awful". He also mentioned the case of an employee who became very expert at hiding his lack of literacy by getting his wife to write his reports for him. The problems are not restricted to school leavers, but extend to higher levels of the education system, the CBI said.

Anoushel Ansari, an Iranian—American business woman, began her historic journey as the world's first female space tourist on September 18.

It was reported that Ansari paid $20 million to become the fourth private space explorer to take a trip on the Russian spacecraft and visit the International Space Station. An American—Russian crew went with Ansari.

In 2002 Ansari gave $10 million for the naming rights to a prize awarded to the first successful, privately financed, manned trip into space.

HOME BAKING is flourishing(popular) in Britain, with fans spending £429 million a year just to create their own bread and cakes. That is a rise of 25 percent since 2001 and market analyst Mintel predicts it will grow by 28 percent more in the next five years, to be worth £550 million.

TV cooks like Jane Asher are credited with pushing up the craze, with Mintel' s senior market analyst Vivianne Ihekweazu saying, "Women are remembering the days when they were little girls and they would come home and find their mother baking in the kitchen. It is shown that it is something interesting to do, especially with children."

It adds. "The popularity for home baking has been helped by 'easy to use home baking products such as cake and flour mixes and ready—made pastry (酥皮蛋糕) Whether it is a traditional fruit cake or a Victoria sponge -cake, nothing beats a piece of home -made cake with your afternoon tea."

Sales of cake mixes have grown by 34 percent since 2001, compared to just an eight per cent growth in sales of cakes bought from shops. Although consumers who use cake mixes may not necessarily be cooking from scratch, they are clearly still getting involved in a home baking experience as opposed to simply buying cakes off the shelf.

Sue Bridger, the lead tutor in home economics, added, "There is a huge interest in home baking at the moment, with women on the course ranging in age from their early 20s to their mid-80s. They get a real satisfaction from baking a cake from scratch. It's easy once you know how and home baked cakes are cheaper and taste much better than shop-bought cakes."

Jane Asher says of her passion, "There ' s something about a home-baked cake. There is a sense of achievement when you put a cake on the table,"

Online learning is also called distance education. Many American colleges and universities have been offering it for years.

One example is New York University in Manhattan. The School of Continuing and Professional Studies began online classes in 1992: Its Virtual College has taught more than 10,000 students from across the United States and other countries.

Last year, the School of Continuing and Professional Studies launched NYU Online. It offers NYU's first online programs to earn a bachelor's degree. Programs are offered in three areas: leadership and management, information systems management and social sciences.

University officials say classes are highly interactive (互动), where students communicate with each other and their teachers. Some classes require students to all log in at the same time so they can attend live lectures by a professor. Students can also ask questions and work together on team projects. The university says classes are taught by NYU professors who have been trained in online teaching.

International students must take two admission tests before they can be accepted into the program. These are the SAT and the TOEFL. The cost to attend NYU Online depends on how many classes a student takes. It can cost as much as 15,000 dollars, a year. NYU offers no financial aid for international students in this program.

Many other schools offer online education. Students should be especially careful of programs that offer a degree in return for little or no work. These are known as diploma mills (制造厂), and are illegal in the United States.

Educational advisers also say that before you enter any program, make sure the work will be recognized in your country. You should also make sure the schools you are considering are accredited.

67. The writer's purpose in writing the passage is to

- A. point out the advantages of online learning
- B. persuade students to take NYU online classes
- C. give readers some information about Online Education Program in America
- D. remind readers of the risks of taking online classes

68. Which is TRUE of NYU Online?

- A. Students can take as many majors as they want.
- B. The more classes a student takes, the higher the cost will be.
- C. Students must take the SAT and the TOEFL tests before they are admitted.

D. Students must all log in at the same time to make their classes highly interactive.

69. Why are readers advised not to enter online programs needing little or no work?

A. Because they are not officially qualified.

B. Because the degree they offer are not recognized by many countries.

C. Because what they teach is not practical.

D. Because their teachers have not been trained in online teaching.

70. The underlined word " accredited " in the last paragraph means

A famous B. experienced C .poorly equipped D. officially approved

Sharks are among the oldest animals on Earth. There are hundreds of kinds of sharks. Most are about two meters long. The dogfish shark, however, is less than twenty centimeters in length. A shark has an extremely good sense of smell. It can find small amounts of substances in water, such as blood, body liquids and chemicals produced by animals. 71 Sharks eat fish, other sharks, and plants that live in the ocean.

Sharks grow slowly. About forty percent of all sharks lay eggs. 72 Some sharks carry their young inside their bodies as humans do. Some sharks are not able to reproduce until they are twenty years old . Most reproduce only every two years. And they give birth to fewer than ten young sharks. For this reason, over-fishing of sharks is of special danger to the future of the animal.

Sharks are important for the world's oceans. They eat injured and diseased fish. Their hunting activities mean that the numbers of other fish in ocean waters do not become too great. 73.

People hunt sharks for sport, food, medicine and their skin. Experts say the international market for some kinds of sharks has increased because many parts of a shark are valuable.

Collectors pay thousands of dollars for the jaws of a shark. 74 The skin of a shark can be used like leather.

In Asia, people enjoy a kind of soup made from shark fins. Experts say a fisherman can earn a lot of money for even one kilogram of shark fins. Sharks are among the oldest animals on Earth, but some sharks are in danger of disappearing from Earth. 75.

A . Shark liver oil is a popular source of Vitamin A

B . This protects the plants and other forms of life that exist in the oceans

C . Sharks are valuable to us and we can make full use of them

- E. If too many sharks in one area are killed, that group of sharks may never return to normal population levels
