改错:

Yesterday, my mother asked me why (if/whether) I wanted to go to a training course. I tell (told) her I had my own plans for this winter vacation. I didn't want to go to (去掉 to) there. Before the vacation began, she (I) had decided that I would read some very good books and visit some places (of) interest with some of my friends. On (In) my opinion, we should work very hardly (hard) at school so that we can get good marks and go to a good university. But during the vacations, we should do anything (something) else. We should relax yourselves (ourselves). Do (Doing) some sports is a good choice. After all, all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy.

作文:

Dear Jack,

How is everything going? In your last letter, you wanted to know something about a famous Chinese artist, Zhang Daqian. Now let me make a brief introduction of him.

Zhang Daqian (1899-1983) was born in Neijiang, Sichuan Province. He is one of the greatest/most famous artists in the twentieth century. When he was young, he spent a large amount of time copying ancient works, which marked the beginning of his painting. And he travelled to many places of interest both at home and abroad. The experiences enabled him to paint better. Besides, he formed a good habit of reading all his life, which he thought widened his eyesight and was good for his painting. As a result of his efforts, he became an all-around painter, and his achievement in landscape painting is especially great.

That's all. If you still have any problems, write to me soon.

Best wishes.

Yours sincerely
Lihua

Text 1

M: I want to take Flight 788. Am I late?

W: Don't worry, sir. You won't miss the flight. Look, it's been put off because of the heavy fog.

Text 2

W: How long have you been working in this travel agency?

M: Since I graduated a decade ago when I was just 20 years old.

Text 3

M: Shall we take a bus or drive ourselves?

W: Let's leave our cars here and take the subway into the city.

M: Great! Thus we needn't worry about traffic jams and it'll save a lot of time.

Text 4

M: I'd like two tickets to Tokyo for tonight, please.

W: OK. Would you like a first class ticket?

M: No, economy class is fine. What time is the flight?

W: It leaves at 10 from Gate 11.

Text 5

W: I've made a hard decision. I want to leave the company.

M: Why do you make such a decision? You don't get a pay rise?

W: My aunt has a business company and I have accepted her invitation.

M: Then there is no better choice.

Text 6

W: Hi, darling. I am wondering if you'd do something for me.

M: Of course. What is it?

W: You know my uncle and his family are coming to spend the Spring Festival with us.

M: En, you said you were picking them up at the train station at the weekend.

W: Well. I happen to have some work at the weekend. I hope you could pick them up.

M: Well, you want me to be their driver? How can I fit so many people and packages in my car?

W: Mr. Black promised to lend his truck to us.

Text 7

W: Did you hear about that guy who broke into a student's home last night?

M: No. what happened?

W: There were no alarms and it was quite easy for him to get in, but he didn't realize that she was at home. She was an art students and managed to draw him after he was gone.

M: Did he take anything?

w: Not much, but when she took the picture to the police station, they recognized him immediately. He had several criminal records and was known to the police.

M: Is he dangerous?

W: No, he is never been charged for a serious crime. But the student was very frightened. She couldn't have known he wasn't violent at the time, of course.

Text 8

W: David, are you in?

M: Yes, Mum. I just returned home a while ago.

W: A while ago? Today is Tuesday. Your baseball practice will be done the day after tomorrow. Why did you come home so late?

M: Well, we got the result for our literature test today. I got the highest mark in my class, so my friends and I went to the club to celebrate.

W: Oh, really? Why didn't you call me?

M: I did! The calls went unanswered. I couldn't get through to you.

W: Oh yes. My cell phone happened to be out of power. Now what do you want to eat for dinner? You can have whatever you want since you do well in your test.

M: Great! Can we have sandwiches? I love your homemade sandwich!

W: Ah, I'll make that tomorrow dear. We don't have any cheese at home. How about beef?

M: Sure! I love that too!

Text 9

W: Nice to meet you, Mr. Carla. I'm Susan. I read your advertisement on the website.

M: Oh, yes. Come in and I'll show you around. As you can see, it's a three-room flat. The furniture is new and modern.

W: I like that night table next to the bed. I like to read books in bed.

M: The clothes chest on the other side of the bed is big...

W: That's wonderful! I have a lot of clothes. Could I change the sofa? I have a set of European-style leather sofas that would look great in the room.

M: Yes, you can make any change you like, as long as you don't damage anything.

W: Can I see the kitchen? I think I have to cook a lot.

M: Yes, of course. It's over there. You can enjoy the modern equipment in it.

W: Fine. Well, I really like the flat. And the price in the ad suits me well.

M: OK. I need two months' rent in advance. So if everything is OK you can move in anytime.

W: I can't wait to move in. I will move tomorrow and bring the rent then.

Zao Wou-ki, a painter who was the highest-selling Chinese artist, died on Tuesday at his home in Switzerland and the age of 93.

Mr. Zao, who is known for his special works, suffered from a serious disease and weak health. He was living in a lakeside house with his third wife, who survives him along with a son from a previous marriage.

Born in Beijing, in 1920, Mr. Zao studied fine arts in Hangzhou and Chongqing before moving to Paris in 1948. In France, he began to discover Western art styles and became a key figure in art in the second half of the 20th century. However, his career was at its lowest point in the 1990s, when few of his works were sold and museum interest decreased.

The artist's career took off again following a major art show in Paris in 2003. Since then, his mix of Chinese techniques with Western art style has caught the eye of wealthy Asian collectors—especially from Taiwan and mainland China.

In 2011, Mr. Zao was the top-selling, living Chinese artist, with his works selling for $90 million in total that year. Demand remains strong. Last week, one of his paintings sold for $4.8 million at a sale in Hong Kong.

Zao Wou-ki, the Chinese French artist internationally recognized to be an art master, won a lot of honors and respect all his life.
