When www.Amazon.com began to offer online shopping in 1995, it became the pioneer of online shopping, because few businesses were working on this then. Analysts (分析家) thought that people would just sit around all day at home and buy things through their computers. Now, the number of people that are comfortably shopping online is growing. That is good news for online businesses.

There is also bad news. People that haven't shopped online before don't want to start doing it. That is because a trip to a shopping centre is and will be a kind of entertainment for many people. Another reason for keeping people away from online shopping is that many people worry about it. They worry whether they will receive products (产品) they buy on time or in the right colour. If online shopping is developed further, people will be able to learn more about the product they want to buy. For example, people can learn more about the product by touching or trying the product before they buy it. In this way, they will trust (信任) the online shops more. However, this is only a dream of many people until now.
